“Knowing that you could change the course of one family’s life, and give them a sturdy, safe place to call home was one of the most rewarding experiences of my life.”
- Jesse McKinney, volunteer

“I am so grateful that someone gave me a chance to be a homeowner. It helped change my life. I started loving more, I started helping more.”
- Phyllis Davis, homeowner

Building a better world one house at a time
40-Year Legacy
Millard and Linda Fuller were millionaires who gave away their fortune in 1966 to search for a higher calling. That search led them to Koinonia Farm, a Christian community in southwest Georgia where they met and were mentored by biblical scholar Clarence Jordan.

Bible Finance Plan
Koinonia gave birth to the idea of Partnership Housing whereby homes built with donated materials and volunteer labor were sold to families using the “Bible Finance Plan” — no-profit and no-interest. This allowed even the working poor to become homeowners.

Helping Millions
The Fullers went on to start Habitat for Humanity (1976) and The Fuller Center for Housing (2005). Combined, and with the help of millions of volunteers and supporters, the organizations have built, renovated or improved more than 400,000 homes.

Volunteer Opportunities

Faith Builders
Put faith into action by engaging your church in this ministry — build a house, build a congregation!

Global Builders
Travel to places like Peru, Armenia, Nigeria, Haiti and El Salvador to experience another culture and help improve the lives of people in need overseas.

Student Builders
We invite college students and youth groups to join their local covenant partner, or a project in another location, in volunteering and fund raising.

Disaster ReBuilders
Tornadoes, hurricanes and other natural disasters can turn lives upside down in an instant. Help rebuild lives and communities as part of long-term disaster recovery.

RV Builders
If you live or travel often in your RV, share your skills with one of our covenant partners across the United States.

Faith in Action
Building and restoring houses around the world for people in need, The Fuller Center seeks to follow the Gospel of Jesus Christ with action — lifting families out of poverty by lifting them out of poverty housing. An ecumenical Christian organization, the Fuller Center welcomes volunteers and supporters of all faiths and backgrounds who share the belief that every child should have a decent place to call home.

Interest-Free & Profit-Free
Following the biblical mandate “if you lend money to the poor, don’t charge interest” (Exodus 22:25), Fuller Center homes are sold to families at no profit and no interest.

Homeowners
Homeowners are full partners in the building process, contributing “sweat equity” and paying back the cost of homes — on terms they can afford — into a “revolving fund” to help other families in need.

Greater Blessing Program
In addition to building new homes, The Fuller Center also repairs houses owned by partner families in need. We help families stay in their homes while affirming The Fuller Center’s commitment to building in ways that are sustainable and environmentally friendly.

How We Work
The Fuller Center works through local groups around the world called covenant partners who raise funds, engage volunteers, select partner families and do the work of building and renovating houses. Volunteer labor and donated materials help minimize building costs.
