The Fuller Center for Housing

Save a House/Make a Home

A housing initiative that benefits families, financial institutions and the market

With the help of banks, mortgage firms, volunteers and caring supporters, we are restoring vacant and foreclosed homes to good condition and filling them with decent families who need a hand up, not a handout

Why now: There are more than 18.5 million vacant houses in America. Meanwhile, nearly 6 million American families live in poverty housing, not counting those who are homeless or living with relatives.

Smart business: Financial institutions can relieve themselves of the burden of the costs of maintenance, insurance and taxes on vacant properties by transferring them to private ownership.

Lift the market: Vacant houses, especially deteriorating ones, drag down overall house values, which hurts existing homeowners and real estate businesses.

In good hands: Ninety percent of The Fuller Center for Housing's work in the United States involves home repairs and renovations. We know how to fix homes and fill them with deserving families.

The Fuller Center for Housing is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit. All donations are tax-deductible.

ABOUT US

- The Fuller Center for Housing works with, not for, families who contribute sweat equity.
- Our "hand up" approach boosts the pride of our homeowner partners.
- Families' zero-percent mortgage payments are used to benefit the community, and donated materials and volunteer labor keep our costs low.
